

Diane Simiu

Diane Simiu is deputy to the General Commissioner for sustainable development, within the French ministry of the ecological and solidary transition. Previously, she was environmental advisor to President Emmanuel Macron and Prime minister Edouard Philippe. Prior to joining the current administration, she was Programs Director for WWF France, where she was responsible for defining and implementing conservation strategy and overseeing the delivery of field projects. Ms. Simiu also worked as the head of the Carbon Markets Unit in the Energy and Climate DG of the ministry of environment, and as an environmental consultant for PricewaterhouseCoopers and ICF International. Ms. Simiu is a graduate of the Ecole Polytechnique in Paris, and holds a Master of Science in Environmental Engineering from the University of California, Berkeley.