

Josefien van de Ven

Josefien van de Ven is acting director of the department of International Affairs at the ministry of Transport and Water in the Netherlands. She is responsible for multilateral negotiations and cooperation on subjects of transport, environment and climate adaptation. Her special focus is new international relations and strengthening of the science policy interface.

She has an M.Sc. in Environmental Studies from the University of Utrecht, including a minor in Anthropology from the University of Leiden. Prior to her positions at the Ministry of Transport and Water from 2020 onwards, she was employed by various organizations in government, management consultancy and financial consultancy. Her experience ranges from policy development for environment, water management and the energy transition, to fund development and -management for both private and public organizations. She has been responsible for many cooperations at the intersection of science and policy.